FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Bentonville, AR, January 14, 2021 — Doug McMillon, the CEO of Walmart, was the keynote speaker at this year's Consumer Electronics Show (CES). In his segment, he spoke about equality, leadership, managing the pandemic, becoming a regenerative company, and more.

"There is broad ongoing change happening at Walmart," said Doug McMillon, CEO of Walmart. "Not only are we looking at workplace equality and diversity, among other social issues, but we are developing technology to handle the pace of change. The run rate of the company going forward will be faster forever as a result of what's happened."

One of the ways Walmart is looking into making their customers' lives easier is by adding to the Walmart+ program. Customers that subscribe to the service will be able to "scan and go" while shopping at Walmart, enabling them to purchase their products and check out without having to go through the long checkout lines.

Walmart has also begun distributing Covid-19 vaccines in New Mexico and is working with several other states to start the same process. Their priority during the pandemic is to keep store associates and customers safe, and McMillon applauded store staff for continuing to work during this time. Walmart was able to secure millions of masks for their associates from the beginning, putting the health of its workers at the forefront.

McMillon also stated that Walmart is being bold and more aggressive on their ever-evolving journey at diversity in the workplace. He believes in going beyond diversity training and has taken his own trips to Montgomery, Alabama to learn about the Civil Rights Movement in order to educate himself. Even as the company's CEO, he recalls times this past year where he didn't know the answer to a question the company was facing. He and his team worked together to find a solution. He believes that delegating and trusting in your team are important qualities that a leader should possess.
